

Century Road Club Association Records 1903–2003

A Finding Aid / December 2009 (updated December 2015)

Abstract

Records of the Century Road Club Association, a bicycle racing club based in New York City, including correspondence, newsletters, minutes, photographs, race publicity and results, magazine and newspaper clippings, and other materials from approximately 1906 into 2003, documenting club activities and bicycle racing in the United States, particularly in the New York Metropolitan Area.

Background

The Century Road Club Association (CRCA) is a bicycle racing club based in New York City. CRCA was founded in 1898, when it broke off from Century Road Club of America, a nationwide club based at that time in Chicago. For some time, the club consisted of several regional divisions as far away as Southern California, though the most active division was in New York.

The club's history tells much about the history of cycling in the New York Metropolitan Area, and in the United States in general. It served as a founding member of the Amateur Bicycle League of America (now USA Cycling) in 1920. Cyclists introduced to the sport through CRCA have participated in races at all levels of the sport nationally and internationally. In addition, up to the 1970s and early 1980s, leaders of the club played active roles in the administration of bicycle racing nationwide, such as in helping organization of championship events and managing U.S. teams in international competition.

For much of the period encompassed in this collection, the club was led by Lou Maltese, a top racer in the 1920s and 1930s. To an extent, this collection also serves as a documentary biography of Mr. Maltese.

Scope and Content

This collection consists of records of the Century Road Club Association (CRCA), a bicycle racing club based in New York City, including correspondence, newsletters, minutes, membership cards and lists, financial records, photographs and slides, race schedules, results, racing programs and fliers, cycling magazine and newspaper clippings, and other material from approximately 1906 to 2003. Among the material are documents from other cycling clubs in the Greater New York City Area, including the Century Road Club of America, the Kissena Cycling Club, and the Union Sportive Italian.

The collection as contains information concerning the creation of the Amateur Bicycle League of America (now USA Cycling) and about six-day and long distance bicycle racing, as well as racing at a wide range of locations in New York City and surrounding areas.

The collection contains much material about, produced by, or collected by Lou Maltese, a prominent racer in the 1920s and 1930s who became a leader in the club. Also included is correspondence about and from Jack Heid, who represented the United States in international competition beginning in the 1940s. In addition, it includes information about the organization of national championship races and the selection and management of United States teams in international cycling competitions.

Material in this collection relates in particular to the following subjects:

Extent

Twelve boxes (approximately twelve linear feet).

Name of Creator

Century Road Club Association (CRCA). Also contains news clippings, advertisements, correspondence and photographs from other sources. Contains artwork by Howard Freeman and photography by H. Kloss, Ted Leyson and other contributors.

Dates of Creation

Approximately 1906-2003.

Repository and Access

The collection is held in the home of the President or another officer or designated volunteer of CRCA; access may be obtained by request to the President or other officer of CRCA. For contact information, visit www.crca.net.

The condition of some of the material is poor or extremely poor, so access may be limited.

Conditions Governing Reproduction and Use

When access is allowed, scanning and reproduction of CRCA and public domain material is encouraged provided unlimited use of scans is granted to CRCA and proper attribution is given.

Copyright

The collection contains some material published before 1923 or between 1923 and 1989 without copyright notices or registration, and which is therefore in the public domain. The remaining material, including unpublished material, is copyright CRCA or the original author, publisher or photographer.

Preferred Citations

Century Road Club Association Records on first mention; subsequently CRCA Records.

Acquisition Information

This material was accumulated in the course of business by officers and volunteers of CRCA. About half the collection (Set 1) was provided by Lou Maltese to another CRCA officer, Jim Boyd in the 1980s. Jim Boyd passed the material to CRCA officer Mike Green around 2007. Another part (Set 2) was passed from Lou Maltese to Betsy and Philip Jordan and then to CRCA officer Liz Marcello around 2014.

Processing Information

Some arrangement of material and labeling done by Jim Boyd. Additional processing and finding aid produced by CRCA member John Tomlinson, with support (for Set 2) from Liz Marcello, Nanci Modica and other club members. Finding aid is maintained by Mr. Tomlinson.

Related Material

Some original documents from CRCA in the early 1900s are held in the New York Public Library, including in the Charles P. Staubach Family History Notebooks 1769-1977 held at the Humanities and Social Sciences Library. Other material is held at the US Bicycling Hall of Fame in Davis, California.

Current CRCA material, including newsletters from December 2001, is online at the CRCA website www.crca.net.
